On the Figma, you will be able to see the interface and the user flow for the customization pages and shopping cart page. As updated in the low-Fi sketch, I did a minor redesign on the item preview display during the customization, and add a dropdown for consistency. Also, I did not left out the little color square to assist understanding of what color users choose. There will be a preview of what those colors look like in the real implementation. Such mapping in color name with their preview square is essential in aiding users' mental model.
